Nefertiti's Early Life

Nefertiti was born into a noble family in Thebes, the capital of Egypt at the time. Her father was Ay, a high-ranking official in the court of Pharaoh Amenhotep III. Nefertiti's mother's name is unknown, but she may have been a foreign princess.

Nefertiti was a beautiful young woman, and she quickly caught the attention of the young Pharaoh Akhenaten. They were married around 1358 BC, and Nefertiti soon became Akhenaten's Great Royal Wife. She was the only woman to hold this title during Akhenaten's reign, and she enjoyed a great deal of power and influence.

Nefertiti's Role in the Amarna Period

The Amarna period was a time of great religious and artistic change in Egypt. Akhenaten abandoned the traditional polytheistic religion of Egypt and instead promoted the worship of a single god, Aten. He also moved the capital of Egypt from Thebes to a new city called Akhetaten (modern-day Tell el-Amarna).

Nefertiti played a major role in the Amarna period. She was a close advisor to Akhenaten, and she helped him to promote the new religion. She was also a patron of the arts, and she commissioned many beautiful works of art, including the famous bust of Nefertiti that is now housed in the Neues Museum in Berlin.

There is some evidence to suggest that Nefertiti may have been a co-ruler alongside Akhenaten. She is often depicted in art with the same symbols of power as Akhenaten, and she is sometimes referred to as "the King's Wife, his Great Wife, the Mistress of the Two Lands." However, there is no definitive proof that Nefertiti was a co-ruler, and it is possible that she was simply a powerful figurehead.
